ABOUT THE NED GOODE COLLECTION

Ned Goode (1921-1986) was a commercial photographer who worked in West Chester from 1947 to 1961 and in Paoli from 1962 to the later 1960s. He was active in the West Chester Camera Club, acting as its President for a number of years.

Goode did mostly industrial and commercial work for local companies such as National Foam Systems, Wind Turbine, Pepperidge Farm, etc., taking photos of products and company operations. He also did public relations work for local organizations, documentary photography of auto accidents for the court, as well as some weddings.

His greatest skill was architectural photography, which blossomed through his work on the Historic American Buildings Survey, conducted by the Library of Congress. Goode not only photographed sites in Chester County for HABS, but sites in other Pennsylvania counties and in New England as well.

Collection arrangement:

The Ned Goode collection has been maintained in the original order in which it was created. Goode kept a log of all his commercial work from 1947 to 1953 listed by job number. In the log he recorded the date, and person requesting the job, and a brief description. This information has been transcribed into the inventory. For photos with a job number of 1535 or greater, identifications were based on notes written on the photo or upon visual inspection. Photos with no job number were given an "x" number and a description.

All photos produced as part of the Historic American Buildings Survey [HABS] have been maintained as a separate group, and have been arranged according to the HABS numbering system. The HABS photos noted in this inventory are duplicates of the HABS collection in the CCHS photograph collection and on deposit at the Library of Congress, and are not a complete set. Refer to the separate guide for the HABS collection for the complete listing of properties covered.
